Some forms of nature can be seen through the lush green forests, the vast sky above us, the oceans without an end, the mountains standing tall and so on. Nature nourishes the survival needs of plants, animals and humans alike. It provides the essential components of oxygen, sunlight, soil and water.

Several other products are obtained indirectly from nature which includes timber, paper, medicinal herbs, fibers, cotton, silk and various kinds of food. To fulfill the demand for these products, human beings have now engaged in the slaughter of trees and the destruction of nature. Different industries also poison nature with harmful gases and chemicals in addition to using excessive natural resources.

It is the need of the hour now to reduce natural damage, reuse goods and recycle used elements to form newer ones. People from all parts of the world should come together to lessen the pressure on nature and restore its balance.

(iii) A great man of India

(iv) All that glitters is not gold

The proverb 'All that glitters is not gold' means that appearances may be deceiving and can refer to an object or a person. Gold is bright yellow metal, and it shines brightly. However, many things shine bright, but they are not Gold. The precious jewel Gold is a chemical element that is highly valuable. However, a lot of other objects do shine like Gold but are not Gold. Therefore, one should not judge something due to its outer appearances. Instead, we should examine carefully and find out the real value.

The real value of an object or a person does not lie in outward appearances. A neatly dressed person is not always beautiful at heart but might be wrong at times.

However, a poorly dressed person's appearance may look ugly but might possess real good qualities at heart.

For instance, while shopping, the proverb phrase reminds us to choose things that add the most worth. While choosing friends, some people might not be the same as we thought them to be. While seizing opportunities, dream jobs might be hard and stressful. While chasing dreams, they might be different from reality. Thus, an attractive appearance might lead to falsehood.

Thus, the proverb tells one to develop a habit of being rational and use correct judgment so that one cannot get deceived by their outward appearances.

(v) Village Market

The village market is a very important place where people gather to buy and sell different things. People of that village and from the nearby villages come to the market for the needful. The village-market has few permanent shops and most of the shops come from outside. Many shopkeepers put their articles on the ground to sell them to the buyers. The goods sold in the market include-grains, vegetable, fish, ordinary cloth, utensils, stationary, sweets, agricultural implements etc. There is a lot of noise in the village market. It is really a problem to buy goods in their real price due to much bargaining. The person who visits the market for the first time may easily be cheated. Though the market is full of noise, dust and unpeaceful atmosphere, still it is most useful place to the villagers to sell and purchase of different articles.
